

Missy Higgins, Unbroken

Red hand print on the white of your cheek
Pack your bags quiet while the lion sleeps
Watch your Mum put her name to the line
Next to the place where your Father signed
And inevitably, what you used to be will succumb to the pull of gravity
And you will never
No, you will never see with virgin eyes again

Cause this is the day that everything changes
And your world stops turning
Running straight into the brake lights
You've come to nothing
This is the day that everything changes
And your worlds collide
You know in time you'll wake to find you're a little unbroken

Hold the answer to the light to see your future
Two line blue line tragedy
He brings the metal to the fire for the first time
Tells you it's the last time and it will be Cause inevitably, what you used to be

Will be tainted by the hand that curiosity
And you will never
No, you will never see with virgin eyes again

Cause this is the day that everything changes
And your world stops turning
Running straight into the brake lights
You've come to nothing
This is the day that everything changes
And your worlds collide
You know in time you'll wake to find you're a little unbroken

So how can I explain the isolated rain that follows you?
Wouldn't you agree running always slows you down?
So welcome the pain, stop yourself from delaying it
Cause the real life will never go away

Cause this is the day that everything changes
And your world stops turning
Running straight into the brake lights
You've come to nothing
This is the day that everything changes
And your worlds collide
You know in time you'll wake to find you're a little unbroken