Neil Young & Crazy Horse, Ramada Inn

How many years now together All those years of ups and downs So many joys raising up those kids They've moved on now out of town So many times she tried So many times she cried Every morning comes the sun And it goes rising to the day Holding onto what they've done She loves him so She loves him so She loves him so She does what she has to She loves him so Sheeeee loves him so She loves him so She does what she needs to

In a Ramada Inn near the grapevine They stop to rest for the night Travelling down south looking for good times Visiting old friends feels (light, right, nice?) People they haven't seen in forever Since high school, Santa Fe times The restaurant food and the bottle They had a few drinks Now they are feeling fine Every morning comes the sun And it goes rising to the day Holding on to what they've done He loves her so He loves her so He loves her so He does what he has to He loves her so He loves her so He loves her so

Seem like lately things are changing Seems like lately things are going south A few drinks now and she hardly knows him He just looks way and shuts out And when she says "it's time to do something" Maybe talk to his old friends who gave it up He just pours himself another tall one Closes his eyes and says "that's enough" Every morning comes the sun And it goes rising to the day Holding on to what they've done She loves him so She loves him so She loves him so She does what she has to He loves her so He loves her so He loves her so He does what he needs to

Every morning comes the sun And it goes rising to the day Holding onto what they've done He loves her so He loves her so

He does what he needs to

He loves her so He does what he needs to She loves him so She loves him so She loves him so She does what she has to
