Nica Costa, Nothing

It's late in the evening and you're breathing someone else you come home to call me and i ask you what you've been doing with yourself and you say nothing at all you say nothing at all your flight's longer than usuall and your conscience ain't no company i'm there smiling and warm i miss you so i can't wait to show how i feel but you feel nothing at all you feel nothing at all there we were, never strangers before there was a light that shined on us but now there's nothing at all oh you should'a take a look around before you lay that woman down yeah you're better get a hold of yourself cause there's a woman here who's willing to try weeks go by and your mind seems preoccupied i felt a piece missing here but when i ask you about what's going on you say it's all me my dear so i thought nothing of it all i thought nothing at all

with nothing with nothing
