

Normal Like You, Patience Is A Virtue

Hold tight, breathe easy
We're starving ourselves with anxiety

Constantly, we're trying to run
Let's slow down and try walking sometime
Looking back at my change of direction
I now can say that I have learned that she's not important and I was foolish to care so much Why do we try so hard when satisfaction is so close

These days it's hard enough to please myself
You'll just have to wait in line
Sit down and take a number, we're all looking for our answers and I'm still learning how to breathe again Turn around, take two steps back
There must be bigger worries life is full of questions
We can answer them if we take the time

Sometimes things don't work out Sit back and try to believe Focus, don't procrastinate... don't sidetrack yourself like I did

So let me be your reminder
Let me make the mistake for you Cause I've learned she wasn't worth it and I've learned that patience is a virtue