

Novembre, Child of the Twilight

This is now, since and then and this is where we unendingly forever stand

And then I saw your smile, the origin of the sun which cracks the stone of which we gods are made now that I saw your smile I'd step out from this stump This is where we unendingly forever stand

E' come impazzire in un mare dorato [Translation:]
(It feels like going crazy in a golden sea)

Running from light dive in the wonders of twilight like children of dusk on the run from the day

Do you remember the expanse of desks and the smell of the first days? tears dense and in plenty, while far behind, the world punished you against the wall for noting but just being

Now, taht after all this years I'm no longer sure if you had really existed, or if I just invented you tell me what's left to trust

I face that place again but this time in depth of the self and I'm weaker without your sad smile, the same as mine

Sometimes the sight of the town through the rain fills the pit of a failure of life

when the sight of the town through the rain fills the pit of a life that has failed

This is now, since and than
and this is where we unendingly
forever stand