Parachute, Forever And Always

She's sitting at the table, the hours get later He was supposed to be here She's sure he would have called She waits a little longer, there's no one in the driveway No one's said they seen him Why, is something wrong? She looks back to the window Suddenly the phone rings A voice says somethings happened That she should come right now Her mind goes to December She thinks of when he asked her He bent down on his knees first And he said

I, I want you forever, forever and always Through the good and the bad and the ugly We'll grow old together Forever and always

She pulls up to the entrance She walks right to the front desk They lead her down a million halls a maze that's never ending They talk about what happened but she can barely hear them She tries to keep a straight face as she walks into the room She sits by his bedside, holds his hand too tight They talk about the kids they're gonna have and the good life The house on the hillside, where they would stay

Stay, there forever, forever and always Through the good and the bad and the ugly We'll grow old together, and always remember Whether rich or for poor or for better We'll still love each other, forever and always

Then she gets and idea and calls in the nurses Brings up the chaplain and he says a couple versus She borrows some rings from the couple next door Everybody's laughing as the tears fall on the floor She looks into his eyes, and she says

I, I want you forever, forever and always Through the good and the bad and the ugly We'll grow old together, and always remember Whether happy or sad or whatever We'll still love each other, forever and always Forever and always, forever and always

She finishes the vows but his beeps are getting so low His voice is almost too low As he says, I love you forever, forever and always Please just remember even if I'm not there I'll always love you, forever and always
