Paul Simon, Thelma

If a baby is born and no one complains
Then it's good luck running through young veins
And if life is a blessing
That brushes the tops of the trees
Well it's a short walk in a sweet breeze

I will need you, feed you, Seed you, plead with you All for a taste of your sweet love, Thelma

If the heart is an open memory book That was the chance I took The more I searched The more I shook for Thelma

Last night I slept on a rented pillow A silver moon above my head A thirsty dreamless sleep released me And I reached for the phone by the side of the bed

Now the first time that I saw you I thought She's beautiful but she's too young to be caught People aware of my history Trying to steer you away from me I left a message at your hotel Don't let management poison the well

I will need you, feed you, Seed you, plead with you All for a taste of your sweet love, Thelma

The phone is ringing and I realize
We are time zones and oceans apart
The words I speak in the middle of my night
Fall on your yesterday's heart

If the sun don't shine
If the wind don't break
If the clock don't jump off the wall
Thelma, my darlin' I will cushion your fall

I will need you, feed you, Seed you, plead with you Without the taste of your sweet love, Thelma I am only a man who skirted the edge of despair For a long time And I don't care

I watch you sleeping in a hospital bed The baby curled up in a ball Winter sunlight hits the family tree And everything else becomes nothing at all
