Place Vendome, The Setting Sun

[by Michael Kiske] There were times I could always tell Your every mood, your every worry Now you're just a book on my shelve No more pages to turn So why did I keep on holding on? I never knew if I could do better... I've had thoughts of just letting go But how should I know? Your cries always break my stride But I'm afraid to let you fall How should I know? You say when I'm not around That all the passion will be gone Like the Setting Sun We close the day when nights begun Like the Setting Sun We know when all's been said and done Let us brush aside our fears With a smile I can stop the tears For just a while to let the wounds heal Did you ever stop to think how I feel? Yes it hurts to be mistaken Your cries always break my stride But I'm afraid to let you fall How should I know? You say when I'm not around That all the passion will be gone Like the Setting Sun We close the day when nights begun Like the Setting Sun We know when all's been said and done Let us brush aside our fears (Does it make you wonder?) (Does it make you wonder?) Like the Setting Sun We close the day when nights begun Like the Setting Sun We know when all's been said and done Let us brush aside our fears (Like the Setting Sun) Oh, I want to be close to you Put an end to all our fears