Polkadot Cadaver, A Wolf In Jesus Skin

Do you remember on that day We took you down off of the cross And shot your ashes into space Oh, what a waste of time to believe You would ever come back to life

The resurrections were all faked As the earth trembled and quaked And all the stars fell from the sky And the pagans began to smile and sing

You remind me of a wolf in Jesus skin
I think it's safe to say the drugs are kicking in
As you begin to howl under the Baltimore moon
As you begin to shapeshift into a Christ-like cartoon

Well, I remember when all the idiots and hordes They stood tall like matadors On the eve of the conviction And the gruesome crucifixion

Inside the hourglass of time Hollow futures will unwind Into the ghosts that haunt the past But it never seems to last

You remind me of a wolf in Jesus skin I think it's safe to say the drugs are kicking in As you begin to howl under the Baltimore moon As you begin to shapeshift into a Christ-like cartoon

I see you standing there Your hands running through your hair Bleeding on the country side Underneath a bright red sky

It's warm inside your broken heart I know that I never want to leave The sweetest sting of pains Unlike anything I've ever felt before

Seconds before the shotgun blast Ignites straight into your head Save the last dance for your dying bride Until the horsemen drag you away