

Rainbirds, Your Aching Heart

look around this is the landscape that we`re in there is the house we`ve built and there`s our yellow dustbin and just behind those trees you can see the little barn we used to jump into the hay like we were diving in the ocean walk through the garden now and smell them herbs and spices go strolling up that hill to where the rotting stake is you are looking down on me and i am looking up to you think again
now think again about what you want do all the promises you make i cannot keep all the dreams you bring about are far too deep and one more thing to make this misery complete i wanna know cause i don`t know just why you want to go
look around
this is the landscape that we`re in gracefully surging fields a thunderbolt enlightening the narrow path we used to walk as if we`d sail the seven seas to hide away and booze and fuck like sailors out on shore-leave all the promises you make i cannot keep
and one more thing to make this misery complete: it seems you played the game just a little smarter and while my brittle raft will sink you go walking on the water
this is the landscape that we`re in the lake the trees the birds and bees and everything`s revolving the clouds between the sky and i slowly drift apart the rain will wash away the tears and soothe your aching heart all the promises you make i cannot keep
and one more thing...
