

Ray Davies, It's Alright (Managers Dialogue)

There was still a problem. We had to get management. You're nothing without management, are you? We were discovered playing in a pub by two very well respected gentlemen. They were both about 6 foot 6 tall or there about, aristocratic types. And they wore these classic blue pin-striped suits. Their names were Robert and Grenville. And Robert and Grenville thought it would be a very good idea to manage a pop group. "What do you think, Grenville?". "Oh, what a good idea, Robert". I thought "Blimey, I've never never met anybody like this before". I said to Robert "Robert, have you ever managed anything in your life before?". "Never!". Perfect, they got the job.
