Remy Zero, Perfect Memory

Remember how they always seemed to know We had the forest in our eyes but the earth was in our clothes They thought we'd fall Not at all

So look back on your treasured days When we were young in a world that was so tired Though it's not what we wanted before Even the saints had to crawl from the floor

Summers when the money was gone you'd sing All your little songs that meant everything to me

And I'll remember you And the things that we used to do And the things that we used to say I'll remember you That way

Remember how they tried to hold you down And we climbed those towers and looked out upon our town And everything you hoped would last It just always becomes your past It hurts

But summer's when the money was gone you'd sing All your little songs that meant everything to me

And I'll remember you And the things that we used to do And the things that we used to say I'll remember you Always

But then how this world slipped through my fingers
And even the sun seemed tired
I still cared
As they lowered you down my heart just jaded
In that moment the earth made no sound
But you were there
You helped me lift my pain into the air

I still miss you God I still miss you I know that you are waiting there I always thought that you'd come home

And I'll remember you And the things that we used to do And the things that we used to say

If it don't hurt you it won't hurt me If it don't hurt me it won't hurt you If it don't hurt you it won't hurt me that way
