

Richard Marx, Nothin to hide

There in my darkest hour, somehow you knew what I felt
And just in the nick of time you saved me from myself
Didn't know I could cut through my defenses
And see through the mask
I figured you must want something from me, but you never asked
I just had to call and you were always there
I think you must have been the answer to my prayer
With you I've got nothing to hide
My heart is starting to pound
Now the walls are tumbling down
I wish I could find the words that linger just out of reach
I see myself in your eyes and lose my power of speech
I am someone now that I don't recognize
It took someone like you to shatter my disguise
Now I've got nothing to hide
My heart's remembering to pound
I can feel the walls coming down
I've got nothing to hide
All that I needed was you around
Now the walls are tumbling down
Head in the sky, feeling just like some kind of lovesick child
I finally pulled through, and I owe it to you, don't want to keep it inside
I am someone now that I don't recognize
Oh I'm healing, I'm believing, you made me realize