

Rilo Kiley, Somebody Else's Clothes and you're ridin' in back layin' here on your back you're as serious as a heart attack all those picturesque moments the sunsets glowin' through the back of the van

and the water is diamonds
there's something you're hiding it's just your fatal flaw and you're tryin' to compose but just being this happy is like walking around in somebody else's clothes and you all think i'm stupid, too nice, too aloof there's no one in here at all been on the road for so long singing self-obsessed songs i'm always comin' as i'm goin'

you wish you could just shout it out "just fucking love me i'm tired of leaving and waking up
in somebody else's clothes"

my dad's been in jail for two halves of a year i got my first letter today it was simple and sad it was painfully clear and this is how it read:

"my daughter this time well the water's not diamonds i'm a fraud and i am old and they found me out but just bein' your father is like walking around in somebody else's clothes i'll be out by the first snow wearing somebody else's clothes"
