

Robert Calvert, Ragna Rock

You can call me a hog-drunken swine because I like drinking wine but I'm really not drunk all the time I was sober when I made up this rhyme.
There's Moonshine in the mountains and it's going so cheap
so grab yourself a bucket a still's water runs deep.
There's an injun who married a squaw 'cause her feet were size twenty four I'll tell you what he married her for if you help me get up from this floor.
There's Moonshine in the mountains
and it's going so cheap
so grab yourself a bucket
a still's water runs deep.
Well the reason this redskin got wed to his freak-footed bride like I said has completely gone out of my head won't you please pass that bottle instead.
There's Moonshine in the mountains
and it's going so cheap
so grab yourself a bucket
a still's water runs deep.
I remember it much better now it had something to do with a cow she could milk it with one foot and plough with the other ... no that ain't right somehow There's Moonshine in the mountains
and it's going so cheap
so grab yourself a bucket
a still's water runs deep.
I recall that they both came to town she was wearing a Buffalo gown and the old man when he saw my frown said she's great when she treads them grapes down There's Moonshine in the mountains
and it's going so cheap
so grab yourself a bucket
a still's water runs deep.
