

Rotting Christ, Snowing Still

all my dreams
take me backwards
i can see
a little child
his mother
in black
what a pleasure
touched by death
snow falls
cover the dead
cold doesn't
touch her
ice melts
as the warm tears fall
kissing the dead brother and it's snowing still in a lake of white
swans stare
at their direction
sad they live
black strange birds are coming although early
the night deep falls
tears turn to ice
by the cold
the snow covers his body and the snow stops falling in shape like crows and as swans become wizards speaking human words the morning next together they will be