

Sabbat, Advent Of Insanity

A sea breeze echoes softly it's song echoes through your mind, leaves you thinking of tomorrow and the life you left behind.
Come turn your head to face the wind that fills enchanted sails, and drives you to your destiny as silent sirens wail.

A sad lament for travellers held in the hand of fate, your future stands upon the prow your past drowns in the wake.

What chance is there for sanity when madness takes the helm, and steers you on a downward spiral to his lonely realm?

Watch the night-sky- seagulls fly and in the heavens play, Yet even angels stoop and still pick nothing up they say.

There are things far more sinister that haunt the midnight air, the sirens serenade a warning telling you:

"Beware- the waves upon the water are like ripples in your mind, and the shadows cast by nature show the future you may find.

As rivers flow because they know that they must join the sea-thus you will be carried on to meet your destiny."

Do Dark Horses Dream Of Nightmares?
Standing on a strange shore-this desolate coastline, it offers cold comfort.

Very little more than the sky for a blanket the earth for my bed.

THE SISTERS OF WYRD:

"Thethreads upon the loom of life have foreordained your coming here, so weep not mannikin of mankind dry your worthless puppet-tears."

Unanswered questions-how they play on my mind, now that darkness is falling and still there's no sign of my guide.

Either I have been betrayedthey have left me to die, or worse still at this moment he lies-an unwitting victim by brigands attacked, left naked and dead with a knife in his back.

Childhood terrors return to me now, from the rank stench of fear in the sweat on my brow.

Deceit and despair are to me kith and kin, seduced into slumbermy nightmare begins.

WODEN:

"Welcome - welcome to my domain,
I have been biding my time.

Watching and waiting -
but now you are mine.
Weaving the web that entwines you, like a puppet you play on the end of your strings 'till the end of your days."
Daylight flees as night gives chase I'm held in panics dank embrace, I smother in his cold caress - the sum of all my worthlessness.
I have been told to thank the Lord for all that He will send, but if death should come to meet me - must I greet him as a friend?
Now I see that this quest is a test of my fidelity - has God forsaken me?
When maddness sings his lullaby a nightmare filled with unknown things - to cast aspersion on my sanity.
Faith starts to flounder in a mind torn apart, my thoughts move in time with the beat of my heart
A creature of habit
I make easy prey, cross faith and fire cannot hold at bay the beast that pursues me -
the end drawing near.
My soul keeps no secrets - he knows what I fear.
Flying so high on the wings of a dream, over mountain and forest -
'cross river and stream.
While the creatures that feed off the doubts I invent await my arrival with evil intent.
WODEN:
"Welcome - welcome to my domain,
I have been bidding my time.
Watching and waiting -
but now you are mine.
Weaving the web that entwines you,
like a puppet you play on the end
of your strings 'till the end of
your days."
So in that twilight world that lies amidst life and death I dream, and writhe in fitful slumber no-one hears mgy silent screams.
Except the horses head that stares with black and lifeless eyes, atop its totem glaring as it mocks my helpless cries.
Now I see that this quest is
a test of my fidelity -
has God forsaken me?
When maddness sings his lullaby a
nightmare filled with unknown things -
to cast aspersion on my sanity.

Shapeless form surround me casting shadows in the night,

I feel their breath upon me-catch their faces in the light.
Somnambulistic hunters come to prey upon my fears - as peals of psychopathic laughter echo in my ears.

Startled I waken from my death-like sleep, though fearful and shaken I crawl to my feet.

Still my memories taunt me - like ghosts they appear, forever to haunt me when darkness draws near.

WODEN:

"Welcome - welcome to my domain,
I have been biding my time.

Watching and waiting -
but now you are mine.

Weaving the web that entwines you,
like a puppet you play on the end
of your strings 'till the end of
your days."

Then fleeing from the terrors at the night before I leave, the remnants of reality behind me 'neath the trees.

Waking in the light of dawn I pray that God will send - his wisdom now to guide me through this night-time without end.

Now I see that this quest is
a test of my fidelity-

Has God forsaken me?

When madness sings his lullaby a nightmare filled with unknown things -
to cast aspersion on my sanity.