

Saturday Looks Good To Me, You Work All Week

When you work all weekend you can't help but feel strange by the time Monday shows up everything has changed

Out behind the schoolyard to the sound of passing trains when you found out about him he's already too late

You see them muttering secrets to each other in crowd but they're not saying nothing you don't already know the only thing that you can't stop thinking about is how everybody knew before you

When you smash the window in the glass rolls off the car when the next weekend washed up you were still at the bar

You've been such a basket case the drat boy broke your heart and if he finds out you miss her he'll tear you apart

Now I'm not saying you can't think for yourself or even that you should go find somebody else but whether you ever get over them or not they're still going on without you
