Saxon, Overture In B-Minor / Refugee

[Byford/Carter]

Cry for the children Sons and daughters left behind They walk alone down the trail of tears Full of heartache, full of fears

Stand with open arms Waiting for the fall But who'll be there to help ya When your back's against the wall

You'll be sailing home before the storm Through the night into the dawn On the wind I hear your voice calling Sailing home before the storm

Why, cried the people Give me shelter from the storm They take the road across the bridge of sighs No more heartache, the other side

Ya stand with open arms Ya scream into the night But who'll be there beside ya Can you see the end in sight

You'll be sailing home before the storm Through the night into the dawn On the wind I hear your voice calling Sailing home before the storm

Sailing home before the storm Through the night into the dawn On the wind I hear your voice calling...

Sailing home before the storm Through the night into the dawn On the wind I hear your voice calling Sailing home before the storm

Sailing home before the storm Through the night into the dawn On the wind I hear your voice calling Sailing home before the storm
