

Serena Ryder, This Song Is About You

I love when your smile makes me stop,
and rest for a while and see what's I've got.
I've been wearing the same clothes since the day I was born
It's nothing that I can ignore.
I love to stare at your elastic face, how it stretches around your words and leaves so much space. I
We were walking downstairs holding hands.
I was rubbing your belly and your backside too.
We were smiling so widely; we didn't care who knew.
And I've been waiting waiting waiting waiting for you.
And I've been patient patient now what am I gonna do?
You invited home late the other night
You said "Come by tomorrow" I said "Alright."
Your girlfriend away, I arrived at your door.
I didn't mean to knock, but there you were.

Your eyes were watering as you smiled.
You held me close and tight like I was your child.
You said "I can't wait for you, I cannot be alone.
Gotta dog and a girlfriend, and job and a home."
You said "I can't wait for you, can't be alone anymore.
So I asked her to marry me."
And I've been waiting waiting waiting waiting for you.
And I've been patient patient what else was I supposed to do?
And I've been waiting waiting waiting waiting for you.
And I've been patient patient what else am I gonna do?
I love when you smile, it makes me stop
And rest for a while, and see what I've got.
I've been wearing the same clothes since the day I was born. There's nothing now that I can ignore
