

Seven Ender, Pick Up What's Left Of You

It's hard enough to say
Without seeing her face
You're turning so pale
It might be best
For me to write it down

And too many times she's cut you
Leaving your wounds to bleed through
And covering all that you live life for
She used her guilt to beat you
That if you left her life would be through
But it wasn't enough that it kept you from staying out

Too much too little too late again
You are the one that's falling
You're not alone
It's time you see all that we've been seeing

Let's pick up what's left of you
And throw it on the table
And you'll see
It's still you

We'll gather up all the pieces
Wrap 'em in our letters of feelings
And we'll drive by
Chuck 'em at her front door

Too much too little too late again
You are the one that's falling
You're not alone
It's time you see all that we've been seeing

Too much too little too late again
Your life isn't fair
And you're not alone
In all of this
You're not alone
In all of this

We will be right here
We will be right here waiting
We will be right here waiting
To keep you faced ahead

We will be right here
We will be right here waiting
We will be right here waiting
To keep you faced ahead

Too much too little too late again
You are the one that's falling
You're not alone
It's time you see all that we've been seeing

Too much too little too late again
Your life isn't fair
And you're not alone
In all of this
You're not alone
In all of this
You're not alone
In all of this
You're not alone

In all of this

Too much too little too late again