

Silence Is Sexy, You Are A Mirror

If you could name what we want to be part of Ideals that we share but never show
The beauty's hidden underneath the surface
Today might be the day to let it go

You're screaming out that you might need a saviour
A hero or a saint to heal our broken hearts

We should have left these thoughts so many years ago
But time and time again we don't and let them grow
You are a mirror showing me what I hide
How far do you bend before you break the light?

Where can I find the words to take you higher?
I'm staring at the books I never read
I fear to feel the fear that's still inside you
And fill my thoughts with words I leave unsaid

You're screaming out that you might need a saviour
A hero or a saint to heal our broken hearts

We should have left these thoughts so many years ago
But time and time again we don't and let them grow
You are a mirror showing me what I hide
How far do you bend before you break the light?