

Silent Surrender, The Addict

The days that I remember haunt me in my sleep,
And I am sick and tired of what you've put me through.
There was a time when I could look into your eyes and see that love and truth were in all you'd do
Darkness took a step into your heart,
And tore a great relationship apart
I can never walk away...
Oh, remember what I have to say.
I pray that you wont turn away.
I'll leave this to you now so promise me you'll go
And bleed out what you have become.
You looked at me and with an open heart
You said how you could never hurt me
(The past eats my soul)
A heart so pure and white the sacred tomb,
For now has been left black and dry - a bit of beating coal.
The peace of you that you have bottled up inside. I watch as your wrist spills wine.
I could never give up hope you'd walk away
Oh, remember what I have to say.
I pray that you wont turn away.
I'll leave this to you now so promise me you'll go
And bleed out what you have become.
You're breaking down,
Calling me
Alone you bleed.
Left alone without a word,
Could anything be more absurd?
The addiction that you've developed marks our suffering.
Death is the end of your road, parting ways with bodily abode.
You've really gone and done it now.
I will never forgive you
And you will never forget me
This time I get the last words
I hate you.