

Society's Finest, Six Seconds Left Until Daylight

It's not fair that it happened,

That the day fell and took you from me,
It's nighttime now and I rushed to find you,
Knowing that I wouldn't.

I know there's a day that the Sun will come up
And I'll be able to feel safe again.
But today, all I can do is hang my head
and let the wind blow against my face.

Today the sun rises, but comfort never comes,
What can I do to say "I love you,"
Because I never did on the day you left.
And I regret not telling you how I felt,
But everything happened so fast.
Now you're gone and I hate myself.

There's so many words and not enough time
For me to love you.

I love you.

My eyes tear up with love for you.
All I can do is hang my head
And let the wind blow against my face,
And it hurt to close my eyes to feel safe again,
There's only six seconds left until daylight

And I can never say "I love you."