Sorry About Dresden, A Reunion Of Sorts

Break out the champagne, It's the kind we drank last year. On the shores of your acquired house, With twilight drifting near.

Can you recall the happiness Or get back the years? Nights around the kitchen table Saturdays in cars with myths and aspirations Mouthing many secrets with useless connotations.

I had a dream last night Of the day your brother died He was cold, alone inside his car choking carbon monoxide Does he come to you when you sleep? Do you shake instead of dream? Whisper that you forgive him.
