

Sparklehorse, Junebug

a beautiful woman she rose from the smokin' waters of the lake with a candle that burned in each palm my teeth each sank gently to the floor bring me some luck little junebug your cousins they're gods to the seas
the march afternoons
the sun and the moon
before I fall asleep a white blood of wolves must be drained and that sorry captain howdy scatters my bones for the lambs
the march afternoons
