Suspyre, Alterations Of The Ivory

"April's fortunes seem to be on the rise since she has a new place for her to play. She is content in the lvory, where people actually listen to her; she finally feels like she might be where she's supposed to be. That old familiar song starts drifting back into her head every time she gazes into his eyes. It is time to teach someone else her song..."

I live and breathe for my new Ivory As I stumbled into destiny I've followed his eyes when they come my way And I'm taken into him today

And when his gesture Becomes his picture I'm simply assured By his demeanor

Remember my song I'm singing along When he says it's wrong It should be our song

And so he buys the baby grand So he can hear my song at last We fade to one...

I've seen my body, I've seen it unfold It takes the senses and leads me away But I know passion, now I know it well These are the memories the song has made

The crowd must never be kept in suspense So I promise the time is tonight And then we stare to never lose our sight Only to see someone blind our eyes

Stealing his money I stay with my keyes Guns pointing at me Then he starts to scream

All becomes silent And all is content My song's only sent In dying torment

Guitar solos: Gregg / Rich

I've seen my body, I've seen it unfold It takes the senses and leads me away But I know passion, now I know it well These are the memories the song has made
