

Tammany Hall NYC, Suddenly Not Alone

happy hour can commence.
i have said my piece, now stick around i'll say nonsense.
tavern's rocking from the booze [musky scent sure sign of sex in mind nothing to lose] senorita gives the eye.
"quite a rack she's got," says some sot to some other guy.
looking down, to look right back,
i make my way through crowds like lions through a wild wolf pack.
suddenly not alone.
suddenly i'd like to take you home.
suddenly shyness slips.
suddenly i'm only seeing lips.
suddenly i'm all right.
suddenly will only last a night.
send my buddies on their way
'cause good fortune dealt a hand that made me want to stay.
"who am i? What do i do?
just some guy who's waited all his life to talk to you."
chase is on you hide, i'll seek.
bat your lashes, making passes, "No don't don't speak."
tell your friends that you say "bye".
let me kiss you so you'll come right back and don't get shy.
suddenly not alone.
suddenly i'd like to take you home.
suddenly i'm all right.
i've never been wary before.
"You married? You sure? 'cause that isn't my style."
sure hope that we can do this with ease, hope she isn't a tease 'cause it's been a while.
don't care what you have to do.
everything is new and i want to get down. get down, baby.
"talk is talk, honey, let's fool around."
suddenly not alone.
suddenly i'm all right.
