

The Animators, Rearrange

it's like you turned around and found yourself alone disbelieving all the things you thought you'd known and if you never were a loner maybe childhood's finally over it's not as if you have a terror of camaraderie but everybody knows that company loves misery 'cause naked need is an attraction but you can't feign the right reaction rearrange each day

so no one's gonna ask how you're feeling inside
rearrange each day
keep the phone ringing and just watch the dollar sign you can't change what you can't change no one told you to change when your friends are strangers who's gonna change your mind?

so intent on finding a place you belong but discontented when you're anywhere for long were you ever so impatient? or is it more like desperation?

rearrange each day
you can't change what you can't change
when your friends are strangers who's gonna change your mind?
