

The Bear Quartet, Tibet

if you'll make it down to the water you better rub against the rocks until the shame wears off you gotta get it off then wrap yourself up in napkins all the ones it takes you took it all for granted and that was your mistake you could have done something, anything but you didn't react you were blindfolded, petrified when it came to that he says: "I wasn't aware of what I was up against I never saw the ban

I miscalculated the resistance when I tried to act a man I got carried away by power the situation got out of hand and anyway she was asking for it she was asking bad"

you could have been someone, anyone instead of less than none a good-looking girl in the mountains untouched by evil scum guilt by association if there ever was guilt by not taking action I know the feeling cause I've seen it close to home
