

The Berlin Project, I Won't Wait For You

So I think it's time to go,
openly I tell you,
I think you should know,
I still love you but I need to trust you more,
I won't wait for you.

To waste your life one day at a time, without me, to hold your hand so tightly and walk you away from this.

So I think it's time to go,
openly I tell you,
I think you should know,
I still love you but I need to trust you more,
I won't wait for you.

But you come back to destroy me,
I can see the white in your eyes.
But you can't hold on to the memories, that you lost one bump at a time.

So I think it's time to go,
openly I tell you,
I think you should know,
I still love you but I need to trust you more,
I won't wait for you.

And now you've lost everything else around you, including the parts of your face, that fascinate me,
now crushed to dust,
and blown straight through the back of your head.

There's something about you, that leaves you always on your own.

There's one thing that I told you, it won't be fun to die alone.

The snow is falling around, the blood from your face is staining the ground.