

The Black Maria, To Have Loved

Close your eyes and just let go,
And find the beauty outside of your front door,
You've been lost in the dark,
Inside your apartment with a broken heart,
Because it hurt too much to let go...

And you have lost all your self-control,
You wake up miserable,
A broken heart in a box you're buried away,
Six feet under to get rid of all this pain...

Because it hurt too much to let go,
of the life you always have known,
You've been lost in yourself,
Your imagination is a crippling hell,
To have loved is to let go...

And you have lost all your self-control,
You wake up miserable,
A broken heart in a box you're buried away,
Six feet under to get rid of all this pain...

You have lost all your self-control,
You wake up miserable,
A broken heart in a box you're buried away,
Six feet under to get rid of all this pain...

You said you'd never change,
And you can't seem to bring us back to the place of where we first started from,
And you swore that you'd never leave and forever be mine and that you'd die beside me,
So where are those forgotten promises now?

You have lost all your self-control,
You wake up miserable,
A broken heart in a box you're buried away,
Six feet under to get rid of all this pain...

You have lost all your self-control,
You wake up miserable,
A broken heart in a box you're buried away,
Six feet under to get rid of all this pain...

My light is my hope that won't stop burning,
For a love that is more than just a passing thing,
How long?
How much more?
How long?
How long will this take?
