

The Shins, Those Bold City Girls

you slide out at night to show your self you need to hang yourself under water and your cold friends memorized a thousand lines and kissed your thousandth guy none pack more than wood so you wake up the taste of the night before has grown somehow you memorize your make-up you're free from their eyes and all they laughed about sailboats that never float and lids of lead they hold your ego down what's it take to bend the lens?

as someone who might just help you row but never can amend the trends towards the rocks weilding the knives

beneath your breasts and all your waves t hey never break
within our sight
so come on treat me right

if you could keep him you'd dub him
the rock what aced them two to one the powder from your empty boxes resounds from your whole empty youth and still you wake up the taste of the night the moon has grown somehow you take off your make-up

you're free from their eyes and all you laughed about