

The Tea Party, The Majestic Song

With a thought you could change what you've never really known.
With a lie you could take from the love they never shown.
Come along, come along now it's not too far away.

And the streams, they are running to an ocean that is dry.
And the sands of the ocean are the prophets in the eye.
Of the sage who has chosen to forfeit all he knows...I know.

And you know,
And you know now that some things never change,
In a world,
In a world that seems bound by human pain.
Come along,
Come along now it's not too far away.

And beyond you will see the how the ever changing glow,
It surrounds all the feelings you never thought you'd know.
Come along, come along now it's not too far away.

And you know,
And you know now that some things never change,
In a world,
In a world that seems bound by human pain.
Come along,
Come along now it's not too far away...I know

And the streams, they are running to an ocean that is dry.
And the sands of the ocean are the prophets in the eye,
Of the sage who has chosen to forfeit all he knows...I know.

And you know,
And you know now that some things never change,
In a world,
In a world that seems bound by human pain.
Come along,
Come along now it's not too far away...I know