

The Verve Pipe, Half A Mind

sometimes i wish we had a short term memory just enough to recognize each other's face it would be the same old stories but you're hanging onto every single word i have to say and to the world i'm not that clever but you would stay with me forever i'd keep your friends from reminding, reminding you to save yourself, leave me behind you would if you had half a mind i'd tell you every day's your birthday and every gift i bring could be the same or how i stood beside you at a shotgun wedding and the child we once would love but never came hearing stories that were never you would stay with me forever but i'd forget to make money and you'd forget to save yourself, leave me behind you would if you had half a mind (how vulnerable you are)

write a note to remind you you would if you had half a mind (how effortless to stay together) for these ties you may have severed now you'll stay with me forever and so you write on your forehead, or better yet you engrave so when you look in the mirror, well you won't forget to save yourself, leave me behind you would if you had half a mind (how vulnerable you are)

write a note to remind you you would if you had half a mind (how effortless to stay together)

if we had no memory whatsoever we would stay right here forever
