

This Is A Standoff, Affliction

I should have listened to the sound of your voice and watched you cautiously pain and guilt won't live here now you're taken away from me you left a note to remind all of us to push and carry on and that's why this ignorance will prove me I was wrong I know you distraught conscience took your innocence away I know your lease on life was sold indifferent we all paid I finally found affliction couldn't hurt with all the things you pushed away punishing yourself just made it worse and I can't wait to live again
I never wanted anything, except relive what times I left you there I should have met you by the wall disarranged inhaling iou's the thought of intervention pushed aside what made you lonely we're all adjusted by perceptions, twisted notions you've seen through you put a wall around the very place you faded to and you're so berated with this visions every night you really need someone to remind you it's alright
I finally found affliction couldn't hurt
with all the things you pushed away
punishing yourself just made it worse
and I can't wait to live again
I never wanted anything, except relive what times I left you there and you're so ocupated with this visions every night you need someone to remind you it's alright
I finally found affliction couldn't hurt of all the things you pushed away punishing yourself just made it worse
and I can't wait to live again
I never wanted anything, except relive what times I left you there
