Tilly And The Wall, Sad Sad Song

push your heart back under your sleeve don't know what you want me to believe you give me pink prayers but black and white words is it love or pain you want me to learn? hold your hand after the dark kiss the luck well omaha's so drunk it's my terabithia so pull over let's watch the mountains burn this is where i want be and let that sad sad song that always plays in your head finally sleep let's just sit and think of you seems like that's what i always do you're cloaked in red i'm drenched in blue tired of guessing what you feel what is true and what is real your eyes so wide yet they can't see quit hiding your words so full of courage your actions still louder than them so turn your back, mirror's cracked, now so black next time, borrow please don't steal the california cars pass and sparkle in your eye so who's the next one to break, next to fake, next to hide don't walk over to me don't talk, i'm not listening spent long blackening the space i've forgotten the shape now of your pretty face hold on to me right here hold my hand we're almost to our castle now don't let the tumbleweeds arrest just feel the beating of our hearts inside our chests

i have set a new timeline for my life but now we sleep in our dreams where our castle lies let's watch the mountains burn this is where i want to lie and let that sad sad song that always plays in your head finally die