

Too Bad Eugene, Walking The Dogma you thought you could see through all those who would oppose you and take on dominion omit all their opinions every time you open your mouth it's to argue you keep us in line 'cause what would the world do without you?

so needless, we climb these walls you've built to our harm (everyone's) but you need this to keep your hatred out of the wrong you're searching, you found him someone who might be slipping with your eyes expanded you want him caught red-handed there's that evil smile you put on when you've got a victim and it's been a while since you found one to hear your sermon

but you need this to keep your

we were all so weak and so fatigued but you're right 'cause you say so 'cause you're the pope and it's your papal bull its looks like they all grew a little tired of you you figured they quit it could you just wait a minute? has it crossed your mind that no one wants to hear what you think?

'cause we all want wine and you're giving us acid to drink i hope you figure out some day that you've got way too much to say and your words can hit so hard
