Trespassers William, Cabinet

Thought like ink Love runs out So i kept it up on a shelf And i will polish it finger it But never let it breathe by itself Whatever happens next When nothing's left I'd just rather not see You've been slicing like a knife Like eve with her bite But i don't think you've wounded me we Don't fall into love It slips from the cabinets and falls into us I stand apart from your body in the dark But our gazes link like a bridge And i don't think that i'm weak Though my lips open to speak That i'd trade my soul for a kiss I turn away to cry but even when i lie There's some things words cannot hide And my aim's never been good But my arrow to the moon Is so close it scrapes the sides We don't fall into love It slips from the cabinets And falls into us Now love's tangled up Like a sititng duck I don't have to search You're all my answers We don't fall into love It slips from the cabinets and falls into us
