

Venera, Lost In The Stars

Walked by a patch of water in which I saw the sun
It made me think of you, and how far you'd really gone
Then I heard the sound of wings, of a bird that didn't sing
He held his breath for you, that's something that I can't do
That bird didn't know a sad song and when I whistled one he flew along
I guess what scared him was the sound, he left two feathers on the ground

I left them in the earth, guess all beauty turns to dirt, but I will wait for you till the stars fall down into my backyard
I will wait for you, as the sun burns down upon my back
I'm lost in the stars
Love is a battlefield, love is murder
Pacifism is suicide, what can I do but hurt her?
The stars aren't falling and neither are you and I
The stars are calling, but we're not calling anymore
Let's start another war
(repeat chorus)
Once we were free to ram these lands and cut right through the fog

Now that they're gone and we're older, we stalk these streets like lost dogs
