Weeping Willows, Truth In Your Eyes

As we were walking home that night Your eyes had lost that loving glow And I could sense I'd be alone I held your hand a bit too tight While I was walking on your toes And then I knew that you would go I was hoping that strong love would grow But like a fool I just didn't know On my shore the waves went crashing After ebb there's always a tide I was blind when signs were flashing In my heart I tried to deny The truth in your eyes I wouldn't let go of your hand The child within me hid his face But I would never let it show I couldn't fully understand Inside I begged for an embrace Cause I could feel the cold wind blow Loneliness was waiting for me Onlyness is my destiny On my shore...